Music

Music provides opportunities to practice patterns, math concepts, and symbolic thinking skills, all in the context of a joyful noise. Music contributes to gross motor development through dancing while the fine motor development of music usually occurs when children hold a flute or bang on a drum. Music activities also practice self-regulation, turn-taking, and building relationships.

Creative & Imaginative Play

Creative & Imaginative play helps to promote vocabulary and build communication skills through socializing with other children. Whether they play alone or with other children, imaginative play promotes problem solving skills. Creative play, such as art activities builds strong fine motor skills and develops a strong imagination for your child. This sense of imagination created also ensures a strong self-esteem.

Early Learning Toys

Early learning toys are beneficial for young babies that are learning all about their new environments. Early learning toys are highly sensory and aim at introducing babies to different sounds, textures, and colors. For older babies, early learning toys can be used as tools for cognitive development. Shape sorters, sensory balls, and popup pianos can all be used to promote developmental growth.

Skill Building

Playing with skill building toys is how children test their ideas and learn new skills. These toys are heavily focused on the development of fine motor skills such as putting items together or pulling them apart. Skill building toys also allows children to problem solve either alone or with others. Through these toys, they are learning new words, developing new ideas, all by using their imagination and strengthening their cognitive development.

STEM

STEM Toys are some of the multipurpose learning materials that kids can use to sharpen their learning skills & knowledge and still have fun at the same time. These STEM Toys aim at sparking interest in science, technology and mathematics in children at a very young age. This is particularly in the early development stages of kids when they are growing interest in the things they like.
